I had intended to bring this case before council for further consideration, if possible. I was moved by two reasons. The officer has had a very good and unprocurable career as a judicial officer. The High court had high opinion as much of his capacity as of his integrity. Secondly though the maximum period, according to rules, has been endured, it has not substantially benefitted him. He has been recruited from the bar and therefore judicial officer's cases, do not and need not form precedents for other departments. His case may be further considered for an adhoc pension on the basis of 25 years service, including condonation period
